WORLD COURT MAIN GOAL OF WOMEN VOTERS

League Members to Work for Favorable Action by the Senate

CHILD LABOR BAN SHARES CAMPAIGN

Study Groups to Be Organized to Investigate the Immigration Problem

By MARJORIE SHULER RICHMOND, Va., April 22 - The World Court will be the main business of the National League of Women Voters from now until Dec. 17, the date set for consideration by the United States Senate. A "cam-paign of talk," with schools to teach the women how to do it, a concen-trated drive in the states, and community-study-groups interviews with senators, public meetings, were de-termined upon in a meeting of the executive council of the league today.

In the words of Miss Ruth Morgan of New York, chairman of the committee on international co-opera-tion to prevent war, "The women feel that public sentiment favors United States participat on in the World Court and that the country is en-titled to a decision of the question at the hands of the Senate."

Continuing Study Group

Sixty-nine league members scattered through the country have bestudy group for immigration prob-lems, the council was told, by a special committee appointed to outline a plan of work on immigration. The committee has prepared a syllabus with statements from opposing points of view and bibliography. It presented recommendations which were adopted, as follows:

"The committee recommends that this or some other committee be con-tinued to carry out and complete this program for another year and to ret once more to the national board fore the seventh annual conven-

there were a number of bills introduced in regard to immigration, none of any importance were passed excent a 1 000 000 appropriation for a board of patrol along the Mexican and Canadian borders to prevent the smuggling of immigrants.

It appears likely that Congress will not pass any more immigration egislation within the next few years, and in the meantime it is right and proper that the citizens throughout the country should be preparing themselves for an intelligent and informed point of view with reference both to our admitting immigrants d our policy in the assimilation of immigrants.

Economy in Operation and Low First Cost Cited as New System's Merit

Special from Monitor Bureau NEW YORK, April 22-"The best way to show the public the advantage of busses in preference to steam or electric railway transportation is to place the motorcars on routes paralleling the railway and operate both in direct competition. This will show the public the greater flexibility and comfort of the motor vehicle." In this manner, Frank J. Buckley, an organizer and promoter of bus lines, sums up the situation brought about by the changing conditions in urban and interurban traffic.

"A short-haul bus, such as this, is operating on the streets of Boston, and, with a 5-cent fare, is earning more revenue a mile than long-haul busses charging 10 cents, which make two to three times the length of run of the cheaper-rate bus, but which do not have the large turnover of passengers. By placing a bus on a street where cars do not operate, and offering a 5-cent fare, large numbers of people will ride for a few blocks each. Mr. Buckley believes that the public prefers to ride on rubber tires and that, in general, the substitution of busses for street cars or railroad trains on branch lines can be productive of economies to the operating company, and has compiled statistics

The British delegate, Sir Watson Rutherford, dealt with the problem f international loans for the stabilization of exchange, saving that the conference, while not favorable to granting international loans to those countries whose budgets did not balance or who had recourse to inflation in order to settle their financial difficulties, was of the opinion that such loans should be made to those states which would use them for economic recovery.
Sir Watson Rutherford furthe suggested the holding of periodical meetings between representatives o the leading banks in Europe and America and delegates of the inter-

King Alfonso of Spain Says That His Country Is Tranquil

In the Course of an Interview, He Compares It Favorably With Other Nations

PARIS, April 22 (A)-King Alfonso fact that parliamentarism was inof Spain is quoted by the French capable of resisting the effort the writers and brothers, Jerome and Soviet Government was making to Jean Tharaud, as declaring to them impose its will upon the world by CAPITULATES ON in an interview that the tranquil force. Spain had followed suit. conditions in Spain are proof that his country is satisfied with the Gov- nations will not be obliged to abanernment of the military directory, to don legality for a time? I see the which, he asserts, only a handful of professional politicians is opposed. A question which he considers far more important than that of parliamentary government in Spain was whether such parliamentary government would be capable of defending itself against that conception of life which the Soviet government was seeking to impose forcibly upon the world.

The King asked:

Have you in your travels in Spain noticed that we were living in a state of siege under military oppres-sion? The foreign papers I see de-clare our directory shoots and imprisons people and spreads a reign of terror everywhere. Have you received such an impression!

Police Do Not Interfere

Nothing has changed in our customary life, and for my part I know no country where the police are less interfering than here. You can stand in the middle of the road to talk with friends without a policeman telling you to move on. You can drink whatever you like in the cafes after midnight, which I defy you to do in New York or London—those countries of liberty. In Madrid you can sing your head off Madrid you can sing your head off until five in the morning if that amuses you.

There is only one thing changed since the directory—you can walk about with money in your pocket without fear of being attacked. There are no more strikes; our factories are at work, and our em-ployers no longer see their workmen arrive mornings with revolver in hand to assassinate them or to im-pose their own will. You must admit that is something.

"Oh yes," the King added ironilly, "it has to be paid for. Gen. rimo de Rivera (head of the miliary directory) has put us outside the constitution, and that is evidently not know any more than you, but don't you think the country is show-ing extremely slight impatience to see it arrive? Do you believe that in the twentieth century a nation like Spain could submit to a gov-ernment which was displeasing it without a movement of revolt rather than without even a murmus except from politicians deprived of their habitual occupations? Joseph Caillaux Silent During Attacks of Opposition-Reforms Are Put Back

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON By Special Cable

PARIS, April 22-The physiognomy of the Chamber of Deputies which accorded a vote of confidence to the Painlevé-Briand-Caillaux Government by a majority of 87 is unusually interesting. In spite of the 304 supporters for the Government against 217 opponents, the most striking feature was the absence of enthusiasm on the Left. The surprising coldness is due to the abandonment by Paul Painlevé of all points of his program for an internal policy that both made and unmade Edouard Herriot as a parliamentary force. Throughout the crisis M. Painlevé has insisted that the time has come to cease the policy of combat. His declaration, though nominally protesting that he is following the paths traced by M. Herriot, constitutes in reality the most severe blame for his predecessor. A PROCLAMATION Legislation in Massachusetts has wisely established the precedent of setting apart a day to be observed as Arbor and Bird Day, the object being to encourage tree planting and the protection of the forests. As sanctuaries for birds, the forests are invaluable. As beautifiers of the landscape and playgrounds for the people, nothing in the open spaces is so restful and useful. More and more Arbor Day should be observed for the purpose of making the waste places of the State verduous. Massachusetts may not boast of possess ing immense areas of timberland, but it can with profit protect its trees and add year by year to its growing timber and the space set apart for additions to its woodland development. of not guilty.

The defendant took the matter to the Supreme Court upon the chief objection that the amendment of Chapter 138, which prevents liquor transportation and reads, "No person shall manufacture, transport by air-craft, water craft or vehicle, import or export spirituous or intoxicating was unconstitutional in that it deprived a person of his property without due process of law. "The statute was passed in the exercise of the police power of the Commonwealth. It sought to prohibit the traffic in intoxicating liquors; it in no way violated the provisions of our state or federal constitutions.

The Court goes on to say that the act does not conflict with the Eight-eenth Amendment, either. Then the Court says: "The Commonwealth was not required to prove that the defendant knew he was transporting liquor which was intoxicating, or that it was to be used for beverage purposes. The transportation of liqin a vehicle is forbidden, regardless of intent or guilty knowledge."

ETHER AS UNIVERSAL PARTY LINE, CROWDED

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 22 (Special)-"The ether is like a universal party line, already over-crowded," said Frederick L. Rhodes outside plant development engineer, American Bell Telephone Company testifying before the Public Utilities Commission rate raise hearing. "There seems to be no possibility," he continued, "that radio will ever replace wire telephony."

Mr. Rhodes testified that the radio is still dependent on the wire telephone for the transmission between radiocasting stations. He defended the affiliation between the New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., and the American Bell Telephone Company as giving to the subsidiary great benefits from research and resources comparatively cheaply.
The use of the Pupin coil under royalty terms of 41/2 per cent of the subsidiary's gross revenue was defended as an economical means of procuring efficient service.

Under the existing law, which has been in effect about 100 years, the state's attorney is appointed for two years, but is usually reappointed unless he wishes to retire or his conduct is deemed unsatisfactory. Under this plan, Hartford County has had but four state's attorneys, in nearly 80 years. Mr. Alcorn, the fourth, has already served 17 years. The proposed change provides that like the Superior Court judge, the state's attorney be appointed for eight years at a salary of $9000, and that he be enjoined from having a civil practice.

Mr. Alcorn has achieved much prominence in the state and beyond it by reason of his unrelenting prosecution of liquor law violations. John came into this "old round world" on Nov. 24, 1840, of sturdy Huguenot stock. His father was a came from Scotland. Both parents his youth, for it contained one room glee of beating the big bass drum, where all the people who loved the when a youngster, in his father's stars could enjoy them. And now, active in church work, as ever hrough life, he met Phœbe Stewart a teacher in the Sunday school, who became his wife and enthusiastic partner in his astronomical pursuits. Together they made a five-inch telepe. This was night work, for the mill demanded all his daylight hours. When, after three years of unremit-ting labor, they pointed their own telescope at the planet Saturn, their joy was not complete without sharg the vision with their neighbors.

This lens he showed to Professor Langley of the Allegheny Observa-tory, who received him kindly and lent him books on lens construction The second attempt was a 12-inch sumed in polishing, figuring, and testing. At last, the work was done, but the mirror nearly broke the Brashears' hearts, when it cracked in the silvering process.

The following hours almost brought despair, but when he returned the next evening from the mill, the faithful wife took him to their little shop. A fire was under the boiler, the en-gine was oiled, and another 12-inch disk was on the lathe ready for shaping. Her love and confidence were all-sufficing, and with acquired experience they made the new mirror in two months. Meanwhile he had found a safe method of silvering. which now bears his name, "The Brashear Process.

Goes Into Business

In 1881 he decided to go into the business of making telescopes. John Brashear always had a phenomenal gift of making friends in every walk of life. Called by Professor Langley to silver a mirror for the Allegheny Observatory, he met William Thaw, who became his friend and gave him generous assistance in his business ndertakings. Asked by Professor Rowland to furnish true surfaces of speculum metal for diffraction gratngs, he produced thousands, of unexampled accuracy, which are now distributed throughout the world.

Astronomers and physicists were ontinually calling on him for spe cial apparatus. He never lost sight of his first love, the making of telescopic objectives and mirrors. There is a formidable list, given in the apendix of the book, of those 12 inches or more in diameter. The first lens which he ground and polished while still a millwright weighed about four pounds. The glass of the mirror of the 72-inch Vancouver telescope he world's second largest telescope -made by him only a few years ago, weighs more than two tons. In later life, when traveling abroad, he could hardly find an observatory which did

It lacks, however, that sense of harmony between subject-matter and external presentation which is coming to characterize the offerings of the more conscientious publishers. Huneker deserved better of the setters and the binders.

The chapters of the book have appeared before in various papers and magazines. They merely suggest, rather than give, a critical evaluation of the man who in one way or another helped to inspire so many of our latter-day critics.

DECAUSE Col. E. Alexander Menelik, Emperor of Abyssinia, had continued in that faith and practicepresented to the Indian banker, there now comes from the press Colonel Powell's latest book, "Beyond the Utmost Purple Rim."

"The next day," writes the author.

"as my steamer skirted the coast of Africa, I could discern quite clearly, rising against the western sky, a wall of purple mountains. Beyond that mighty rampart, I knew, lay Abyssinia. Then and there I determined to avail myself of the first opportunity that offered to visit that mysterious and little-known land. A country whose ruler expressed his gratitude by gifts of lions . . . was, I argued, bound to be interesting. And the strange stories that reached my ears from time to time during the years that followed of the great black empire hidden behind the ranges, stories as fantastic as were ever conceived in the brain of a novelist, served still further to whet my curiosity and to stimulate my imagination. And so, early in the winter of 1924. ford Barton, Harvard man and photographer to the expedition, started for Abyssinia Mr. Barton's photographs, something like 100 of them, add much interest to an already interesting book

It is exceedingly easy on the eye—too easy, in chance meeting with the lion that at about the same period as Makeda's alleged visit to Jerusalem. The legal code that Colonel Powell saw in operation is based on the Law of Moses; and the ritual of the Abyssinian Church centers about the Ark of the Covenant.

The Ethlopians

Tradition has it that the real Ark of the Covenant, is buried somewhere in Abyssinia, Solomon having had a replica of the Ark made for his son Menelik which was so successful an imitation that the hopeful young monarch, starting home from Jeru-salem for Ethiopia, took the original with him, and left the duplicate. One comes to revise also the connotation of the word "Ethiopian." "Ethiopian" and "Abyssinian" may be used alternatively, and the race described is "a mixture of very long standing, a mélange of the non-Negro tribes of eastern Africa, the Semites of southern Arabia, and the Jews." Colonel Powell's discription of Abyssinia, its history, traditions, and present state adds a very interesting volume to the travel shelf. ## Musical Events—Art—Theatrical News

The Bach Choir of London

Special from Monitor Bureau London, April 9 T CENTRAL HALL, Westminster, on Tuesday, March 31, the Bach Choir gave one of those spacious concerts which are so characteristic of it. Neither length or difficulty can daunt these amateurs. With the courage of culture and intellect they settle happily to a long concert of hard music and do it so adequately well that the audi-London singers had but the voices of the Welsh and Northern Choirs, what results they would get under a conductor of such profoundly true musical instinct as Dr. Vaughan Wil-liams. Their performance of Pales-trina's Mass "Maria Assumpta Est" was a most admirable bit of work; calm and steady without coldness.
Only the lack of first-rate vocal material prevented it from being outstandingly good. In feeling, finish and presentment there was everything required by the remote, simple première was included in the proreality of this unworldly music. Only gram presented by the Cincinnati some of its more delicate beauties never emerged because there was not mcient contrast between the diftheir progressions to show.

A London Première

The main event of the evening was the first London performance of Dr. W. G. Whittaker's work for Chorus and Orchestra "A Lyke Wake Dirge." This was sung twice to enable the audience to know it better. It is a strange, violent setting of the old ballad (more Pagan than Christian) Its stark grimness has been matched by Dr. Whittaker with music as stark, and his great knowledge of the colors and capacities of voices and instruments has allowed him to give full play to his vivid imagination. Long, dogged discords, and holding notes that come to fierce clashes are frequent features, and the forceful progression of the parts is enhanced to the utmost power by the type of orchestration employed. The work is difficult—consummately so, and the Bach Choir did well to produce this intelligent and intelligible performance. It would have been less timid in lead and attack, out all the superficial lightness and been less timid in lead and attack, been less timid in lead and attack, and more convinced of their own in-

Concerto for Two Violins

A Bach Choir Concerto could hardly be without a work by Bach. On this occasion the fine Concerto in C minor for two violins (thought to be the original version of the Concerto for two claviers), was played by Adila Fachizi and Jelly D'Aranyi, accompanied by the Londo. Symphony Orchestra. No praise as a whole, unstinted praise is due the guild. What does it matter if a few slight details in the casting are not exactly as we would wish them? There is enough that is noble in the production to command our admira-tion, and Mr. Shaw's play still shines forth resplendently.

Lionel Atwill may not be as suited to the rôle of Cæsar as was Forbes-Robertson, but who would be? All things considered, Mr. Atwill gives a fine performance. Helen Hayes was a natural choice for the part of Cleopatra, but Miss Hayes' early training was not reckoned on. A long line of modern "flapper" parts is scarcely the groundwork upon which to build a portrayal of Egypt's queen, even though it be Shaw's 16-year-old Cleopatra. Much early training in blank verse, with its demand for the musical legato in reading, instead of the sharp staccato in Miss Hayes' vocal-ization, would have prepared her for a fine performance of her present rôle. With that training, would also

TRADING IN SECURITIES PROFESSIONAL

Price Movements in Stock Market Somewhat Irregular

Confused price movements took place at the opening of today's New York stock market. Selling pressure was renewed against Maxwell Motors A. Baldwin, American Car & Foundry, and White Motors, all of which opened a point or so lower.

Willys-Overland preferred responded to the resumption of dividends by advancing 1% points, and American Sugar Refining and Frisco common also moved up a point each. United States Cast Iron Pipe dropped 1% to 134, a new 1925 low, and 116 points below the year's high established two months ago.

Trading was largely professional in character.

With ithe short interest materially educed by the recent advance, and public participation at low ebb, speculators for the decline found little opition in their campaign for lower spectively, each touching new 1925 lows at 105.

Independent strength was shown by a few public utilities and specialties, Western Union advancing 2½ points to a record top at 132½, and Manila Electric Rallway attaining a new peak price at 43, up 3 points.

Frisco common extended its gain to 1%, and Mack Trucks, Norfolk & Western and Cuba Cane preferred sold a point or so higher.

Foreign exchanges opened irregular, demand sterling ruling slightly higher et $4.79½ and French francs dropping 5 points to 5.18 cents. Scandinavian exchanges were strong, Danish and Norwegian krone each advancing 8 points to 18.46 and 16.35 cents respectively.

Erratic fluctuations, reflecting the play of opposing speculative forces, marked the course of the forenoon marked the course of the forenoon trading.

After the initial selling orders had been absorbed the market steadled temporarily under the influence of a buying movement in shipping and independent oil stocks. American Can strengthened, and the Commercial Solvents issues recovered 6 to 7 points.

Marking up of the renewal rate on call loans to 4 per cent was the signal for a renewal of bear attacks, under which prices of prominent stocks crumbled sharply. Nash Motors broke 10 points under yesterday's closing, General Baking 6½, Maxwell B and U. S. Cast Iron Pipe 5 each, and Baldwin, American Locomotive and Sloss Sheffield 2@3.

With the steel trade reviews reporting more pronounced recessions in steel

With the steel trade reviews reporting more pronounced recessions in steel output and prices, U. S. Steel fell back to 113½, within a point of the year's low. A 2-point rise in Norfolk & Western, in response to the road's lease of the Virginia Railway, was accompanied by supporting orders for other issues, which lifted prices 1 to 3 points from their low levels.

The early afternoon market showed frequent shifts of tendency. Bidding up of Northern Pacific, Chicago & Northwestern and the rubber, gas and electrical issues, Manila Electric Corporation rising 8½. Virginia Railway & Power 4½, and Ludlum Steel 3 points, was followed by an attack on the western railroad stocks.

Northern Pacific went down to 59½, a new low for the year, while Union Pacific lost 2 and Canadian Pacific 2½ pointh. Another raily set in when U. S. Cast Iron Pipe moved up to 136.

Bond Prices Irregular

Bond Prices Irregular

Conflicting price movements marked today's bond trading. Strong bidding for Norfolk & Western and Virginian Railway issues followed the announcement that these roads had agreed upon a lease for united operations and development, with prospects that both would be drawn eventually into the Pennsylvania system. Virginian Railway 5s moved up 2½ points, crossing par for the first time this year, while Norfolk & Western convertible 6s gained 1½ points.

Fractional advances were registered by a variety of other rail liens but these were partially counteracted by the weakness of Chicago & Northwestern issues, which yielded 1 to 2½ the weakness of Chicago & Northwest-ern issues, which yielded 1 to 2½ points. Independent oil issues followed the upward trend of these stocks. Contrasting price changes took place in the French group, Soissons 6s los-ing 2 points.

J. G. Harbord Anticipates Good Business From

NEW YORK, April 22—"Earnings and sales of Radio Corporation of America for the first quarter were substantially ahead of last year," said substantially ahead of last year," said President J. G. Harbord, on his return from South America. "The outlook is very good, and we expect earnings and sales to run well ahead of last year. We have increased our advertising appropriation more than 75 per cent over last year, and it is bringing results. "I understand some smaller manufacturers have had a slump in their business. This, I think, in the long run will be beneficial, because it will tend to eliminate the weaker manufacturers and make the industry more solidified.

PARIS EXHIBITS AT LYONS FAIR

Southern City Grows Fast, Showing Trend Toward Decentralization

By SISLEY HUDDLESTON LYONS, April 2 (Special Correpondence)—The city of Lyons, of which M. Herriet has for 20 years been the extremely able Mayor, has just opened an industrial fair in which the products of the Nation are displayed.

Lyons has become the true business center of France. In some respects Lyons has become even more ortant than Paris itself. The deentralization of which we have leard in recent years so much has really begun in France. Hitherto the whole tendency has been to concentrate everything in Paris, but the great French cities are now claiming their right to become, if not rival centers, at any rate complementary

No city has gone ahead so quickly as Lyons, and there is now gathered on the banks of the Rhone an im-posing display of French industries which well deserves the interest that he French Government has shown.

The Lyons Fair is pivoted upon a eat Palace standing in 30 acres of ground situated near the River Rhone, and close to the Park of the Tête d'Or. There is a large central nave, with 20 pavilions symmetrically arranged around it. There are no fewer than 1700 stands in the pavilions this year. Railway lines are brought up to the main part of the building so that the task of delivering and carrying away the exhibits is greatly simplified.

Fair Initiated During War The extraordinary thing is that the Lyons Fair was really initiated during the war. In 1916, when the struggle was at its height, Lyons began to promote periodical exhibitions. Since then the fair has made the most rapid development. Both in regard to French products and in regard to foreign products which are housed, successive years have seen a considerable extension.

The international side has been mewhat hampered by customs and currency difficulties, but neverthe-less it is noteworthy that while only 142 foreign firms participated in the first fair, their number after the war swelled to 1490. There are few exhibitions of this kind which are so excellently or-ganized. It has been thought desirable to divide industries into 56 groups. The result is that instead of scattered throughout the pavilions, they are grouped together in such manner that it is easy to make

It is well known that Lyons has for chief industry the making of silk. As is to be expected, therefore, one of the most interesting free light free fore, one of the most interesting free light free light free fore. silk. As is to be expected, there-fore, one of the most interesting ints in the fair is that around which silk, beautifully colored and designed, is shown. All the Lyons houses of importance are rep-Moreover, the comparatively new industry of artificial silk this year conspicuously in evidence. It is believed that artificial silk, in which Italy has led the way and in which France has shown a spirit of enterprise, will be manuctured in the near future on a much vaster scale than at present. The future of this industry will be st interesting to watch.

Metallurgy Shows Progress The metallurgical exhibits are also metallurgy France has adopted mod-ern ideas, and there is a tendency more and more pronounced toward amalgamation and working arrangeients between the French firms. tion has been effected in France by the new conceptions which make for association and interlocking between the mineowners and the manufac-

The motorcar trade appears to be ourishing. Over 50 firms take their place in this exhibition. The mountain has come to Mahomet: Paris has not hesitated to send to Lyons examples of its special products. There is, for instance, the highly finished work of the toy-makers, and the artists in jewelry, in which Paris excels, have sent many of their finest

The so-called luxury trades fill a large place. Nearly all the well-known Parisian names are to be found on the innumerable stails. Furriers make a splendid show; shoemakers are fully represented in a department which comprises about

As has been said, the fair is admirably arranged, and there is no difficulty in discovering any particular corner in which one is specially interested. The Guide which has been published, with a plan of the industrial city, is perfectly clear, and a number of inquiry offices have been opened. Further, there is a daily newspaper published in the fair newspaper published in the fair itself which contains an account of all the latest developments.

The Lyons tramway cars run to the great park, while there is accom dation for many hundreds of otorcars As one stands in the fair ground one can hear every language spoken. The international character of the exhibition is apparent when one learns that buyers are coming from no fewer than 45 countries, including the United States and England.

CANADIAN ENVISAGES SOVIET COMPETITION

MONTREAL, April 14 (Special Correspondence)—If Russia comes back to her pre-war status as a nation with enormous agricultural exports. Canada will be in a serious plight, declared Miss Cora Hind, agricultural and commercial editor of the Manitoba Free Press, in an address here. The Soviet Republic, indeed, is already exporting butter, pork, and bacon, and cheap river barge transportation makes competition al-most hopeless for the Dominion, she

The Canadian farmers must achieve lower production costs, cheaper transport and wider markets. Ocean freight rates have gone up 166 per cent since pre-war days, and Canada was meeting formidable competition in the British markets from the United States, Argentina and other

With commendable courage and with an apparent willingness to accept their full share of responsibility in solving

The Women Voters' Program responsibility in solving economic, social and political problems as they arise, the National League of Women Voters, in session in Richmond, Va., painstakingly reviewed national and international issues, and outlined, as definitely as possible, the attitude of the majority of the delegates toward the matters discussed. Prevailing opinion in the convention has been recorded as favoring, among the matters of national government policy discussed, the child labor amendment, creation of a board of public welfare in the District of Columbia, establishment of a federal Department of Education, with adequate financing of the public schools of the District of Columbia, federal aid to the states under the public school system for the lessening of illiteracy, Americanization of foreign-born immigrants, promotion of physical education, training of teachers and equalization of educational opportunities, development of Muscle Shoals as a national asset, legislation for the protection of mothers who are compelled to earn their living in the industries, and enlarged appropriations to the Bureau of Home Economics for research

It is significant that the indorsement of the federal Department of Education and Welfare, and the proposal for federal aid for education in the states, came after a bitter fight directed against both, in which fully one-third of the delegates were enlisted. Among the protesting delegations were those from Pennsylvania and Maryland, some from Massachusetts, and a large number from the southern states. Many of these declared their opposition to any welfare activity on the part of the Government, while others stood solidly against the establishment of a federal Department of Education.

It may be said in explanation of the action which nominally indorses the proposed education and welfare combination plan, that the recent vote of the league indicated little more than a refusal to revoke an approval of the project voiced by that organization several years ago. The attack by an unsuccessful minority of the delegates at the Richmond meeting was collateral in its nature, being simply a protest entered against the previous action. The determined opponents of the dualdepartment plan, indicating their refusal to consider themselves estopped by what they insist was an unwise and illy considered action, have given notice that if, between conventions, the national council of the league should attempt to pledge the organization to a federal Department of Education and Welfare, or should attempt to indorse the proposed federal Department of Education bill, with its objectionable features included, any necessary steps to prevent such action will be taken.

Encouraging assurance is seen in such discussions of important public questions by the women voters of the United States that the American wives and mothers, their sisters and their daughters, are awake to a realization of their new responsibilities. First or last, it seems, every social and moral problem that affects the welfare of the body politic must be debated and considered, even if it is not finally determined, in deliberative or legislative assemblages. These, combined, form the great school of American politics. That school is now co-educational, at least in the sense that it admits those of both seves into its counsels. Those who may have suspected that the enfranchisement of the American women would have no effect upon the attendance at this school probably are already willing to admit that they were mistaken.

As the icebergs drift down toward the north Atlantic paths of commerce, they come under the watchful eye of the Radio Aids to Canadian Shipping international ice patrol. Radio telegraphy has extended that patrol's range of vigilance far beyond the horizon. Other ships are enabled to report to the patrol vessel whenever they sight an iceberg, so that very few get across the ocean highway without being detected. The radio service makes it possible to maintain a clearing house for information, radiocast four times a day, on ice conditions almost anywhere within 1000 miles of the north Atlantic coast. This ice patrol, though financed internationally, is ordinarily composed of two vessels, provided by the United States. With Halifax, N. S., for their headquarters, these boats alternately remain on the high seas for three-week periods. Patrolling the ship lanes of European traffic far north and east from approximately March to July, their radiocasting service is invaluable to all ships en route, and also to the coast stations.

The Canadian Department of Marine and Fisheries has, however, added to this largely American ice patrol service by establishing a spring ice patrol in Cabot Strait, at the entrance to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Two of Canada's big ice-breaking steamers, the Montcalm and the Mikula, patrol between Cape Breton a. 1 Newfoundland. They note the location of local ice and keep in touc. with 'he international patrol farther out. Th. Canadia i or anization also includes ten radio land stations, three directionfinding stations and several radio beacons. The ice breakers receive reports every four hours from the Canadian chain of radio stations between Montreal and the Atlantic coast, from the direction-finding stations on the coast, and from all ships within range, of their local ice conditions and of wind, weather and other incidental information. These reports are carefully tabulated and analyzed by special officers on the patrol ships, and four times a day a digest of the latest information is radiocast from the senior ice breaker to all concerned.

Any steam r bound for Canada is thus greeted with a radiocast of conditions in the Gulf as she approaches the Canadian coast. With the assistance of the Canadian direction-finding stations and beacons, which deservedly enjoy a

i. gh reputation for accuracy and efficiency, the incoming vessel is able to check her exact position whenever necessary. She has definite knowledge of what areas are clear of ice, of weather conditions for 1000 miles ahead, and has accurate forecasts of the same for the next twenty-four hours. Even with all this information, sometimes in the spring a vessel is liable to get surrounded in a field of ice. When that happens, the Canadian ice breakers can be called upon for help. The thoroughness of the Canadian ice patrol is a credit to the Dominion.

A national movement has been launched by the United States Flag Association, of which Calvin Coolidge is honorary president, and Elihu Root active president, to inculcate, particularly in the American youth, greater respect for the country's flag. There is need now flag. There is need now, according to those who are active in the organization, for renewed effort in building up peace-time patriotism. They have noted what they believe to be growing influences and tendencies which are detrimental to the ideals, traditions and fundamentals on which the American Republic is founded, and which are symbolized by the Stars and Stripes. So it is being arranged to make "Flag Week," which this year will be the week of May 23-30, an event of more than the usual importance in arousing all Americans, but particularly the boys and girls of the land, to a keener sense of their own responsibilities, as well as a better understanding of the symbolism of the flag. It is regrettable that it too often seems to require a great emergency, such as war, threatened invasion, or some real or fancied affront, to arouse a stirring sense of patriotism. The inclination is to forget that there is such a thing as peace-time patriotism, as commendable and as necessary as that which prompts the taking up of arms in defense of a common right. Evil wears many disguises less spectacular and gaudy than the habiliments of warfare. Its insidious influence is to destroy, no matter what its outward appearance. The warfare against it is continuing, even when those enlisted lack the inspiration of martial music, the clamor of guns, the sweep and swirl of the airplane, and even the guiding presence of the Great movements such as this one which has been undertaken in the hope that through it there may be inculcated a broader peace-time patriotism are not carelessly conceived. Among its founders are well-known leaders representing the thirteen original states of the American Union, including among others Charles E. Hughes, former Secretary of State; Thomas R. Marshall, former Vice-President; Secretary Curtis D. Wilbur, and Mrs. Thomas G. Winter, the latter a former president of the Federation of Women's Clubs. The National Council of the organization is made up of the governors of the forty-eight states. It is announced that the sole qualification for membership in the association is American citizenship. All citizens of the Republic, irrespective of age, color, sex, or creed. are eligible to membership on an equal footing.

It would be impossible to estimate the potential power for good of an association such as this. A conscious expression of allegiance to the flag and all that it stands for, with the realization that in peace, as well as in war, there is need of eternal vigilance in defending and upholding the right if human liberties are to be safeguarded, will constitute actual notice to those who would tear down and destroy what has been so painstakingly erected, that true patriotism is not languishing in the hearts of the American people.

Among those who have, by direct attack or by innuendo, sought to teach disrespect for the flag, there has persisted the effort to make it appear that the national emblem inspires only thoughts of war. It is these who have sought to discourage its display on schoolhouses, on public buildings, and elsewhere. To them it cannot express love of country, perhaps because that element is lacking. There is need, then, that it be understood that the flag is emblematic of peace, rather than of war. There is greater need that the youth of America be taught to think in terms of peace than in terms of war. The fact should be impressed that true patriotism may be expressed, as it is expressed today, in a rededication of all one's hopes and desires to the cause which inspires and teaches a continuing patriotism.

That a southern state of the American Union has been spending millions of dollars for the Negro Education in North Carolina education of its Negro population in recent years and that it has developed its facilities and its methods in this direction to such a degree that its work has been chosen as a model by the British Government for study and imitation in a great colony in Africa is significant and encouraging. The disclosure of this great work for human betterment, which has been going on with little or no public notice and acclaim, is contained in a short news dispatch just published. The State is North Carolina. It is revealed in the dispatch that this southern commonwealth has spent about $15,000,000 of the people's money for Negro education in the last four years and that the sum devoted to this object there in the last year of record, 1924, was $4.-250,000. Here is something for other states of the south that are faced by the race problem to observe carefully. The news that the British Government is sending a commissioner to North Carolina to study the methods used there, that they may be applied to education of the natives of Africa, should lead other American commonwealths to consider whether they might not also learn something to their advantage in the same way.

The British commissioner, who is due in Raleign, N. C., shortly, is James W. C. Dougall. Next fall he will become director of Negro education in the British Kenya Colony. It is interesting to note that it is in this big colony that the natives under skilled guidance in recent years have taken up the work of forest conservation with remarkable enthusiasm and success. In Raleigh Mr. Dougall will be aided in every way by Prof. N. C. Newbold, director of the Division of Negro Education, which is part of the state department of public instruction.

The people of North Carolina have discovered that it is to their own material welfare to devote public funds to the uplifting of the Negro population, and they have been increasing the appropriations for this work rapidly year by year lately. State aid is given not alone to elementary education. Public funds are devoted generously to the Negro Agricultural and Technical College at Greensboro and to four Negro normal schools.

A concrete example of the value of this policy was given to the people of North Carolina, when the migration of Negroes to the north was at its crest and many southern states were suffering from the effects of losing large bodies of their workers. The presidents of the Negro Agricultural and Technical College of North Carolina and of Durham College urged the members of their race to stay at home and were able to point out effectively what the State was doing for them.

North Carolina has every reason to congratulate itself on its wise policy toward the Negroes, and to be proud of the results of it.

Springtime seldom fails to bring to light some contribution or other to Burnsiana, and this year it has brought out of obscurity a sketch of the poet—done in pencil on rough paper and believed to have been drawn from life—which reveals, in the opinion of artists, Burns' peasant character and peasant character and antecedents more clearly than any other of the portraits. The sketch was found in a book which an Edinburgh decorator bought at a sale ten years ago, but which he thought nothing about until he used it as the basis of a portrait of the bard. Various theories have already sprung up around the sketch, and it is not improbable an attempt will be made to trace its origin and find out whether it does not more truly represent Burns than do the portraits from which the multifarious editions of the poet find illustration.

Perhaps the best known of the portraits is Nasmyth's painting of Burns, a full figure in a colorful setting-on his right a rippling brook bridged by a structure of weather-beaten stone, on his left the verdant woods, in the distance the wild mountains that echo to the words of his songs,—a heritage that Scotsmen treasure. And a close second comes the bust of the youthful poet from the brush of the same artist. The Skirving portrait, idealized by its author, has grown in fame, and the miniature of Burns in his late years by Alexander Reid found ready acceptance by the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. In wood, in stone, in metal, no less than in pigment, the memory of the poet is preserved and at the farthest ends of the earth some representation of him is cherished.

It is not at all strange that every find relating to Burns excites the keenest interest. New Zealand uncovers a fragment of his poetry and the news is flashed round the world. Dunfermline unearths three manuscripts and the press is on edge to learn their contents. A Broxburn hotel proprietor purchases the window of an inn at which Burns passed a night in one of his journeys from Edinburgh, and there is a clamor to see the pane on which the poet had scratched the lines:

The ants about the clod employ their cares And think the business of the world is theirs, Lo! waxen combs seem palaces to bees. And mites conceive the world to be a cheese.

Even a sketch, the authenticity of which has yet to be established, makes pens run, not in Scotland alone but wherever the English tongue is spoken. For Burns was more than a Scottish poet in the restricted meaning of the term. His appeal was as wide as the four winds. He touched the chords of human sympathy as few before him had done, and while the Scottish Doric in which he sang may pass, like other dialects, it will live in his words and sweeten the future of men's lives. Beauty he saw in things held vulgar, dignity he revealed in humble toil, and he imprinted on the hearts of men the fact, coming more and more to be understood, that there is nothing necessarily low in lowly estate.

Editorial Notes

Though published from an entirely different standpoint, a squib recently run below a three-column cut of a crying baby in the Los Angeles Record carries a really illuminating moral for those with eyes to see it. The heading of the "feature" is the words, "Which Baby Week Am I Gonna Celebrate?" and the purport of the reading matter is to the effect that the baby is crying because he has "an awful problem."

is crying because he has "an awful problem."
This problem is regarding the multiplicity of baby weeks being held in the southern California city. But let the baby tell the story himself:

What am I going to do? I can't get around to all these baby weeks, and just as sure as anything if I'm judged the perfectest baby at one week that red-headed kid'll get the prize at the other week.

So far, so good. But the moral is in the next

So far, so good. But the moral is in the next sentence: "What I'd like to know is—when does a baby have a chance just to be a baby, anyhow?"

Perhaps it can never be too frequently emphasized that the application of the Golden Rule would solve the world's difficulties. Hence, if for no other reason, the statement in this connection by the Marchioness of Aberdeen, on her arrival in America to attend the sixth quinquennial convention of the International Council of Women, is noteworthy. She said that woman's program in the reconstruction of the world was not complex, but simple, and added that it could be made effective if all women in the home and business world should be drawn together by an application of this great moral precept to their activities. And then she urged. We can do more through women being brought together in this way than by arbitrations and treaty conferences between nations." And who shall say that she was not right in her contention?

Stanley Baldwin

By CRAWFURD PRICE

No political personality of modern times has so confounded his critics as Stanley Baldwin, Prime Minister of Great Britain. But a short while ago he was regarded as a man without initiative or capacity, who had tumbled into his exalted position more or less by chance—had had greatness thrust upon him, so to speak.

There was no outstanding personality, no marked gift of oratory, no apparent executive ability. His party tolerated his leadership—not without misgiving; his opponents regarded it as their chief asset; public opinion accepted it, like the weather, with resignation. Nothing surprised most men more than the fact that, after the débacle which followed the appeal to the country on the protection issue last year, the Conservatives retained him as their leader.

Yet on the morrow of the recent overwhelming victory at the polls, Stanley Baldwin stood out as a changed man. He accepted the vote of the electorate as an expression of national (not party) confidence, threw off his diffidence as if it were an outworn garment, selected his Cabinet with complete disregard of other people's feelings and opinions, and made it perfectly clear to the country and to all concerned that he intended to call the tune to which his followers were to dance.

As a public speaker he suddenly improved out of all knowledge. As if by the wave of some fairy wand, his matter became sound, constructive and idealistic; his delivery took on new force and breathed profound conviction. Since then he has gone from strength to strength, and his remarkable speech on the Political Levy Bill, simple, direct and high-minded as it was, not only summed up the best aspirations in the state, but was at once a personal triumph and a challenge to the reactionaries of the Conservative Party.

Bluntly put, few onlookers imagined that Stanley Baldwin had it in him, and most are still seeking for an explanation of the change. The fact is that the Prime Minister is a highly complex character. In certain circumstances he can be simple, even unsophisticated—as, for example, when he allowed the lesser but more persistent lights of his party to rush him into the disastrous "protection" election. But behind this there lies a man of courage, determination, imagination, and even resource, who can only express himself under given conditions.

These necessary conditions are obviously those of confidence and authority. Let us, for a moment, trace his political career. He was comparatively unknown when, in 1917, he became Financial Secretary to the Treasury—that is, parliamentary assistant to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In this capacity he attracted little public attention, and only those in closest touch with his work were impressed with his qualities.

Surprise was therefore more or less general when he was promoted to be president of the Board of Trade. Yet in this position he was a remarkable success, and there were very few adverse comments when, later, he was placed in charge of the Exchanger.

was placed in charge of the Exchequer.

As Chancellor, Mr. Baldwin again appeared to lapse from his high estate. He accomplished nothing worthy of note, and his funding of the British ct to America was regarded as a very honorable transaction of questionable expediency. It was, indeed, only by virtue of Mr. Ponar Law's sudden demise and the peculiar political circumstances of the time that he became Prime Minister. And over his first premiership there hung the same shroud of mediocrity, so that when he quite gratuitously appealed to the country last year and threw the Conservative majority to the four winds, men vagged their heads, lamented the implied absence of leadership and professed their amazement that he had not the common decency to resign from a position he seemed so essentially unfitted to noid.

Yet today, after a few months in the wilderness, Stanley Baldwin is back in office, the unchallenged leader of his party and with the greatest parliamentary majority of modern times behind him.

The explanation of this seeming inconsistency is, as we have already indicated, that confidence and authority are necessary to the full expression of Mr. Baldwin's character. As Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury h was a subordinate, and as such never rose above the commonplace; as president of the Board of Trade he became for the nonce his own master, and was then so successful that commercial circles voted him the greatest

"president" of the generation.

But the initiative was lost when he went to the Exchequer, for there he merely stepped into Mr. Bonar Law's shoes and was ever overshadowed by the brilliance of his superior and predecessor. The same circumstances were present when he inherited his first term of office as Prime Minister (he was elected thereto by his party, not by the country), and acted rather as the servant then the meeter of a singularly office Cabinat.

than the master of a singularly effete Cabinet.

The qualities which Stanley Baldwin is manifesting today are those of which he gave promise during his presidency of the Board of Trade, but which he was unable to exercise in a subordinate position. They became generally apparent on the morrow of the last election, when he defied the Tory stalwarts by gathering Austen Chamberlain, Lord Birkenhead, and even Winston Churchill, to the fold.

Since then his development has been rapid and impressive, and there are those around him who are persuaded that he may rise to great heights of statesmanship.

Yet this is not all. The Prime Minister has risen above parties and above politics. His speeches on the social issue, which commenced with his discourse at the Guildhall banquet last November, and culminated, for the time being, in his almost sensational pronouncement in the House of Commons, spoke a new gospel of brotherhood and good will among men. They merit careful textual perusal, but one sentence will perhaps suffice to indicate their motive: "If we cannot hold fast in these difficult times to the Christian ideal," he has said, "we shall as a people go down and perish for lack of vision."

That was the gesture. It remains for us to consider whether it is likely to have any practical effect. It may at once be admitted that the seed was not sown on stony ground. It is significant that the "Political Levy" speech met with an immediate, sympathetic response from all parties in the House of Commons and is still the topic of conversation in the parliamentary lobbies. In addition, moderate-minded men on all sides are getting together to explore the special problems of their industry.

The miners and mine owners, the railway men and the companies, the cotton operatives and the master spinners, the shipbuilders and their employees—all these are meeting together to talk over their differences and difficulties.

There has set in a definite quest after industrial peace. That may have been indicated by sheer necessity. But sheer necessity has indicated it for several years, and it has remained for the Prime Minister, by public insistence upon the Christian doctrine, to bring the problem within the range of practical politics.

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in Berlin

The parties of the tion posters for next the streets of this city. They have only one design, which, however, may be called one of the most artistic ever displayed in this country. Its only drawback is that it reminds people so much of the posters displayed during the many war-loan drives. It shows the head of Field Marshal von Hindenburg in black and white on a tan background and the two words, "Der Retter." in red lettering. Translated, they mean "the rescuer," but it is not said from what the field marshal is supposed to rescue the Germans—this is left to the imagination. The Left parties and the Communists have not displayed their posters.

The first presidential elections, which were held some time ago, must be repeated on April 26 because, owing to the large number of candidates—not less than seven had been nominated—not one obtained the absolute majority of about 19,500,000 votes which is necessary in the first ballot. In the second ballot that candidate will be considered elected who has the largest number of votes, irrespective of whether it reaches the absolute majority or not.

The names of the seven candidates were printed on a ticket in alphabetical order and a blank space was left in an eighth position for anyone who wished to vote for a candidate of his own. This provision was made in order to comply with Article 41 of the Constitution of Weimar, in which it is said that "any German over 35 years" can be elected President of the Reich. About 35,000 voters availed themselves of this opportunity to name the candidate who in their opinion was best suited to head the German Republic.

The seven official candidates came from very different walks of life. Before entering politics Herr Otto Braun of the Social Democrats was a printer and later an editor; Dr. Heinrich Held of the Bavarian People's Party, a publisher; Dr. Willy Hellpach of the Democrats, a medical doctor; Dr. Karl Jarres of the united Right parties, a burgomaster; Gen. Erich von Ludendorff of the Nationalists was second in command of the German armies in the east, and later in the west, during the World War; Herr Wilhelm Marx of the Roman Catholics was a judge, and Herr Ernst Thaelmann, the Communist,

a transport worker, dockyard worker and sailor.
Four of them were, or still are, in leading political positions. Herr Braun was Prime Minister of Prussia; Herr Marx was Chancellor, and at the time of the elections was temporary Prime Minister, of Prussia; Dr. Held is still the Bavarian Premier, and Dr. Hellpach is Premier of Baden, while Dr. Jarres was Minister of Interior Affairs and Vice-Chancellor in the Reich.

A touch of humor was introduced into the presidential campaign by the black-red-gold parties. The names of the rulers of Germany in the past fifty years they declared had been Kaiser Wilhelm I, Kaiser Friedrich III, Kaiser Wilhelm II, President Friedrich Ebert. Now therefore, they argued, it was again the turn of the name of Wilhelm, and therefore either Dr. Willy Hellpach or Herr Wilhelm Marx, two of their candidates, should be elected.

The twenty-seventh edition of "Buechmann's Geflue-gelte Worte," a book of familiar quotations, has just appeared here. The first edition was published in 1863 in Berlin rud contained 750 quotations. The latest edition comprises not less than 4000 quotations, which have been divided into twenty-four sections. Interesting are a number of political quotations which have obtained certain fame in post-war Germany and which have been included in the new edition of this book.

One of these is the well-known "Proletarians of all nations unite!" which was heard so often during the days of the revolution and which is still being used by the Communists. Then there is Bethmann-Hollweg's famous "scrap of paper," Joseph Wirth's The enemy is on the right"—words which he spoke in the Reichstag as Chancellor against the Conservatives after Rathenau's assassination—and Dr. Stresemann's "Silver stripe," which he once declared in the Reichstag he could see lining the clouds on the political horizon predicting their disappearance. Also the title of Spengler's famous book, "Der Untergang des Abendlandes" (The Destruction of the Occident) is included in the book of quotations.

A novel way of starting a football game and one quite up-to-date was employed a few days ago in Berlin when the football match between Berlin and West Germany took place. Shortly before the game began an airplane soared over the field and then, to the delight of the 17,000 spectators, dropped the football to the ground. Berlin won with four goals to one.

A new large steamer has been added to the fleet of pleasure steamships which ply the Havel Lakes in the west of Berlin during the summer months. The new ship is forty-five meters long and seven meters broad. It has two decks, and all rooms situated on the lower deck are lined with marble. In this manner not less than 250 kilograms of marble have been built into the ship in order to weigh it down so that it can pass under low bridges. Several of the cabins can be provided with bunks at a moment's notice, because long tours to Stetti. and Hamburg are also planned. While the new ship will be welcomed by all Sunday trippers, it will be less popular among the scores of rowing boat and canoe owners who spend their Sundays on the water and who are not on very good terms with the many steamships plowing their way through the narrow canals and across the lakes.

Preparations are now being made in Berlin for the introduction of an utomatic telephone service. In all parts of the city and in several suburbs already new telephone exchanges are being erected for this purpose and everal of them are nearing completion. It is hoped that the first one will be put into operation toward the end of this year. The postal authorities-in Germany the telephone service is operated by them-have just announced that they will change the ordinary telephone apparatus into automatic ones free of cost. Already a new type of apparatus, which needs only a slight alteration in order to be converted into an automatic telephone, is being installed wherever it is possible. Munich has enjoyed the advantages of an automatic telephone service for over twelve years and Zehlendorf-Mitte a suburb in the west of Berlin, introduced this service a couple of

All who are skilled in the use of a typewriter have been invited to participate in a competition to be held at the beginning of May for the championship of Germany in quick writing. This competition will take place in connection with an exhibition for office equipment to be opened on May 1 in this city. Large rizes have been offered to those who can write the fastest, and no doubt the typists of Berlin will be in full training, a state of affairs which it is certain will meet with the hearty approval of their employers.

"Trials of a Back-Yard Gardener" To the Editor of The Christian Science Monitor:

Your recent editorial, "Trials of a Back-Yard Gardener," strikes a timely note of warning. It is possible, however, to gratify the natural instinct to dig in the fresh brown earth and to plant something which will grow into use or beauty without committing oneself to a too close confinement to one's own back yard during the months to come.

This can be done through the use of "permanent" vegetables and hardy perennial flowers.
